Birmingham, Alabama

About the artist:

Lindsey Kelly is a rising young artist from Birmingham, Alabama who received her BFA from Auburn University. An internship at the Shelby County Arts Council in Columbiana, Alabama, is where she experienced a working community studio and found her interest in pursuing pottery as a career. Interaction with experienced potters and artists at the Watershed Center for Ceramic Arts in New Castle, Maine served as an opportunity to explore, experiment, and reflect. Lindsey displays her work throughout Alabama, participating in over thirty local art shows and events annually including the Moss Rock Festival, River Clay Fine Arts Festival, and the Birmingham Artwalk. She creates decorative pottery that is functional, allowing each piece to be used daily or elegantly displayed to accentuate a room.

About the work:

Lindsey uses stoneware fired to cone six for all of her pottery, except for her cross ornaments which are porcelain. Her works are hand built and most items include textures imprinted into the clay. All of her items are food, microwave, and oven safe (must preheat oven with pottery inside). Avoid sudden temperature changes, like taking a bowl out of the refrigerator and putting it in a warm oven or putting a hot dish into a sink of water. The items are great for everyday use as well as for decoration.

All of the pottery is handcrafted and it should be understood that variations in size, color, and glaze consistency are characteristic of handmade pottery.
